ANNOUNCEMENTS

Suede by the Music

The AIDS Network was very fortunate to have jazz/pop phenom, Suede, performing to raise awareness and funds for the organization. Partial proceeds from the May 9th concert were directed to the AIDS Network. Her music was enchanting and her humour had people rolling in the aisles of the Provincial Museum auditorium. Suede's crystalline voice mesmerized the audience and her songs made people laugh and cry. The crowd loved her performance and convinced her to come back to the stage for two encores.

A big thank you to Fennel Productions Ltd. for their hard work in organizing and promoting the concert! Of course, a big thank you to Suede for being a crusader in the fight against AIDS.

SUPPORT SERVICES

We Remember:*

Forever in our hearts

Greetings!

It seems like yesterday that I started in the position of support worker at the AIDS Network. But alas, it has been over a month now since I've walked through those doors. And what a month it has been!!

Both Deborah and I have kept ourselves busy establishing ourselves in our new positions. We have managed to connect with almost every inner-city agency there is. As well as providing support services to our established clients, we are reaching out to those who might not be as connected with the Network. So look for us out and about, in the gay community, in the inner-city, on the Streetworks van and at the needleworks site at the Boyle McCauley Health Center.

Our emphasis is to get out into the community and connect with people living with HIV and AIDS where they are at. The hope is that once people are familiar with our faces and the services we provide, they will feel that the Network is a safe and comfortable place to be. With that in mind I encourage you to come down and poke your head in and say hi! Support services is there to help and we don't make a bad cup of coffee either!! Hope to see you soon!

Greetings from the West Coast:

As I sit back and watch the ocean roll in and the mountains tower above me, I think back about that little Prairie town I once knew called Edmonton...

As most of you know, I have left the AIDS Network of Edmonton and am presently working for the British Columbia Persons with AIDS Society. I cherish the time I spent with the Network and all of the valuable gifts of knowledge and friendships that I received. My time at the Network gave me the opportunity to develop a strong philosophy of work (well OK some strong opinions as well) in the field of HIV/AIDS that will guide me in my career.

... ah, the sun is slowly sinking into the sea while colors radiate and reflect off its surface. The ships in the harbor are turning on their lights, creating a miniature city on the sea. Two lovers, hand in hand, pass by, yes things are good....

What I will miss the most about Edmonton are the people I left behind. To all of my colleagues at the Network, I miss you all very much - Sandra, Corinne, Brett, Betty, Lil, Pam, June - you all hold a special place in my thoughts. To all the volunteers - thanks for making things a lot easier and brighter during my work - especially all the hard working members of the Care Team Program - (Hi Jerry - come visit!). To all the members of Living Positive, good health! And remember there is no longer a three month residency rule to move out here!

...there is a cool breeze in the woods as I scramble down the path to emerge to the vast openness of the beach. The bright hot sun, warm sand and the crashing of waves on the shore all means only one thing - paradise.

I have already met most of the people who have made this journey before me - actually it seems like they all meet at a local coffee shop on a certain night of the week. It was good to see people I already know. I have found an apartment - a bachelor suite for $620 dollars - so for all of you complaining about high rent in Edmonton - stop it! I will be leaving for Amsterdam on Victoria Day for two weeks. I will be attending a conference and then a week of well earned holidays. I will be back in Edmonton for a brief visit and to get the rest of my belongings in the middle of June. Hope to see people then.

Sincerely,
Greg

EDUCATION UPDATE

Community HIV Information Exchange Through Resource and Peer Education

This initiative, funded by Health Canada, is in its second year, and will be focusing on completing the goal and objectives as proposed:

1. Develop a model reflecting the AIDS Network moving from a traditional support based or controlled information, education and support program to an alternate approach of community based peer participation in disseminating HIV information, education and support services.
2. Increase information exchange from the AIDS Network Resource Center by 100% through the active and direct participation of contracted PLWHIV to disseminate relevant and current resources to peers and others in the community
3. Hire by contract one or several PLWHIV to coordinate and facilitate information exchange through the AIDS Network Resource Center and training to peers for community based education and support services for others infected and affected by HIV.
4. Train at least 10 PLWHIV to become community information disseminators, peer educators and support workers through the "Train the Trainer" and "Think Positive" Programs.
5. Initiate necessary changes in the AIDS Network Resource Centre in a planned and organized fashion to broaden access to relevant and current resources as well as provide a variety of ways of accessing information including Internet services on HIV/AIDS topics, trained peers accessing and disseminating information, PLWHIV working in the resource center and interacting with peers and others, promoting activities and information sessions within the resource center, and exchanging information and resources with other libraries and agencies in Edmonton and area.
6. Create a supportive comfortable environment at the AIDS Network for PLWHIV through physical access to counselling, resources, lounge drop-in, education services, peers, and other areas to ensure confidentiality and anonymity for those infected and affected by HIV, as well as for other groups and agencies in the community.
7. Establish a set of guidelines or terms of reference for resource needs to maintain/sustain peer training and community based information exchange, education, and support services for individuals infected and affected by HIV.
8. Establish an interagency advisory council consisting of AIDS Network staff, PLWHIV, various AIDS related agencies, Edmonton libraries, and interested others to oversee the project activities and the maintenance of the project activities following the completion of the project.
9. Evaluate and provide recommendations based on the outcomes and experience of this project in bringing out and helping greater numbers of PLWHIV who have disclosed or not disclosed within the community in order for them to make informed health and living decisions.

David Rae and Deborah Norris have been hired as part time coordinators to work with Heather Syren and a steering committee to work on the goals and objectives. They have developed a workplan of activities to be completed over the next year.

If you are HIV+ and are interested in participating in this project, we would like to hear from you. Please contact David, Deborah, or Kathy at the AIDS Network ph 488-5742, fax 488-3735 or email ANOES@CONNECT.AB.CA

Instilling Hope: The patient-doctor interaction

Gina Wong-Wylie

While many physicians are efficient at treating health concerns and symptoms of patients, they can forget the importance of attending to the person involved.

A recent study conducted in collaboration with the University of Alberta and the Hope Foundation of Alberta captured the significance of the patient-doctor interaction to the experience of hope for persons living positive. The research demonstrated that physicians need to consider human well being as they treat the symptoms of patients. Results of the study have been presented at the XXVI International Congress of Psychology and published in the Journal of Qualitative Health Research.

The consequences of a negative patient-doctor interaction were vividly captured in this study. One participant poignantly relayed that an interaction with a physician greatly extended her depression following a diagnosis of HIV:

"How long the feelings of despair, hopelessness and I'M GOING TO DIE TOMORROW type of feelings lasted. They lasted a lot longer than they should have because I just didn't feel supported. I didn't feel in control. I felt like everyone else controlled what was happening to me and my body."

Eight living positive individuals shared twenty-two patient-doctor interactions that had positive and negative impact on their hope. In an examination of hopeless patient-doctor interactions, it was found that these interactions included doctors who treated living positive individuals as patients rather than full human beings. In addition, physicians within hopeless interactions were likely prescriptive, dismissing, and poorly informed on HIV/AIDS. Many of the individuals participating in this study discussed striking debilitating effects like suicidal thoughts and depression states that lasted much longer due to the hopelessness experienced following an interaction with a physician. An investigation of hopeful patient-doctor interactions demonstrated the essential qualities of doctors that facilitated positive and hopeful interactions. They involved doctors who were able to connect with the patient, who used descriptive, informative and empowering methods of relaying information, and who were fully attentive with each interaction.

This study, supported by Living Positive and the AIDS Network of Edmonton Society, emphasized the significant impact that doctors have on the hope of persons living with HIV/AIDS. The research also underscored the necessary and specific components of patient-doctor interactions that enable persons with this illness to live with hope.

Liberals Commit to Continued AIDS Funding

We have learned that the Liberals are including a commitment to continued federal leadership in the fight against AIDS in their election platform. This is very good news for the communities across Canada who are dealing with this disease.

Local advocacy efforts were conducted as a part of a national effort. From all indications, these efforts were successful in keeping HIV/AIDS on the public agenda. Congratulations are in order to all who took part in these efforts.

The Liberals have promised $200 million dollars over the next five years. This translates to $40 million dollars per year as compared to the $42.5 million under the existing strategy which runs out in March of 1998.

Only a fraction of these dollars are used to support community based agencies. Other initiatives which were covered by National AIDS Strategies include research, epidemiology, and national infrastructure support. It is not known how the new money will be allocated but it is hoped additional funds will be sent to community level programs.

The renewed commitment from the federal government is not a total surprise given the success of previous strategies in reducing the toll of HIV on Canadians. Beyond the success of these initiatives, there are other compelling reasons for the government to continue its support of AIDS programming.

HIV/AIDS affects people when they are in their prime working years; it is 100% preventable; is a relatively new disease; and much about it has yet to be discovered. Further, most breakthroughs in AIDS research apply to a wide range of health issues.
